The Institute of Intergovernmental Relations

The Institute, part of Queen's University, is the only organization in Canada whose mandate is solely to promote research and communication on the challenges facing the federal system.

Current research interests include proposals and processes for constitutional reform, the impact of the global economy on Canadian federalism, aboriginal self-government, and the comparative analysis of federal systems.

The Institute pursues these objectives through research conducted by its own staff, and other scholars, at Queen's and elsewhere through an active and growing publications program and through seminars and conferences.

The Institute links academics and practitioners of federalism in federal and provincial governments and the private sector.

Scope

As its title suggests, this bibliography has primarily to do with Canadian federalism. It includes entries for books or relevant sections thereof, journal articles and government documents. As almost every bibliographic entity produced in Canada could fairly be said to relate in some manner or other to Canadian federalism, though, it has been necessary to limit entries in this bibliography to items that relate to the interaction of the various levels of government within the federation. Most of these have to do with federal-provincial or interprovincial matters, although there are selected references to federal-provincial-municipal matters and local government.

This bibliography covers the year 1986, and is intended as an extension to the Bibliography of Canadian and Comparative Federalism, 1980 - 1985 (Kingston: IIGR, 1987)

Organization

As with its predecessor, this work has been organized into six sections: 1. Federalism and Federal Countries deals primarily with differing manifestations of federalism around the world, federal theory and comparative federalism; items treating Canadian federalism from the standpoint of federal theory are included here. 2. Bases of Community: Territory and Ethnicity includes documents that examine the regional, ethnic and nationalistic components of federal states and movements and their relationship with federalism and intergovernmental relations. 3. Courts and Constitutions covers various legal approaches to federalism including the ways in which federal relationships have been encoded in law, and in which disputes are arbitrated through legal means. 4. Intergovernmental Relations focuses upon the mechanics of federal government and the administrative processes required for the implementation of policy within federations. 5. Policy Issues and Roles presents a broad view of the many policy areas in which the interests of different levels of government intersect and often collide. 6. Politics and Government reflects the differing ways federalism has worked itself out in the institutional arrangements of Canadian political life.

Each section is organized in alphabetical order by author. Each entry appears only once in the bibliography; in those cases – and there will, no doubt, be many – in which an item could have been placed in some or even all of the chapters, or if the reader's judgement on these matters differs with mine, access to a given item can be gained through the author, title and subject indexes at the back of the work. The subject index attempts to combine controlled-vocabulary and keyword approaches to the material.

This work and its accompanying indexes were produced from a Procite bibliographic database. Citations are in ANSI (American National Standards Institute) format.

Due to the wide scope of the bibliography it is inevitable that some relevant documents will have been missed. The responsibility for such omissions is, of course, mine. Those users who identify relevant works left out are encouraged to contact the Institute so that these might be added to our federalism database and included in any possible reprints.
