- Soederberg's book is remarkable in its scope and impact. It uses the proliferation of commodified rental housing across the globe as a lens through which to understand how surplus and scarcity are produced and governed across urban spaces. She has undertaken enormously rich empirical fieldwork in three European cities – Dublin, Berlin and Vienna – each of which offer distinctive insights about how these ostensibly global processes play out on the ground and are mediated by distinctive state-society dynamics to simultaneously produce severe immiseration and grotesque wealth. However, the book is about much more than housing: it offers a window into the evolution of contemporary financialised neoliberalism and the deep-seated classed and raced dynamics underpinning it; and, via a highly original melding of the urban geography and global political economy literatures, it demonstrates how these processes engender a constant rescaling and reproduction of deeply exclusionary financialised orders. [...] In short, Soederberg demonstrates with panache and conviction that the consequence of these shifts is the effective normalisation of an everyday life marked by enduring insecurity. In all, Urban Displacements is highly original, deeply informative, and provides an account of today's predatory capitalism that is lucid, insightful, and compelling. Susanne Soederberg is a worthy recipient of this year's IPEG Book Prize and deserves special mention for being the first person to win it twice, having also done so in 2015 for her book Debtfare States and the Poverty Industry. –IPEG Adjudication Committee--
