CALL FOR PAPERS

THE SEVENTEENTH INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON SOCIAL STRESS RESEARCH

The 17th International Conference on Social Stress Research will be held June 6-8, 2020 in Savannah, GA at the Kimpton Brice hotel.

The conference is organized and directed by Professors Heather Turner, Catherine Moran, and Karen Van Gundy in the Department of Sociology at the University of New Hampshire.

The International Conference on Social Stress has become an important conference for scholars working in the area of stress and health and a major forum for sharing new research that incorporates components of the stress process. The conferences are held every two years and attract the leading scholars in the field. Recent conferences have been held in Athens, Greece, San Diego, CA, US and Vancouver, BC, Canada.

The 2020 conference will feature two distinguished keynote speakers: Tony Brown (Rice University) and Melissa Milkie (University of Toronto).

The final program will be based on the content of the submissions. Sessions involving the following themes are common: childhood/adolescent stress and adversity; work and unemployment-related stressors; stress in family contexts; gender and stress processes; race, ethnicity, culture and discrimination stress; intersections of physical and mental health; catastrophic and traumatic stress; LGBTQ stressors, and neighborhood contexts of stress.

We invite you to submit either a complete paper or an extended abstract. In the case of abstracts, you must provide sufficient information for evaluation of the substance and scientific merit of the paper.
The deadline for submitting papers or extended abstracts has been extended to FEBRUARY 8, 2020. Further information regarding the 2020 conference is available on our website:

GRADUATE STUDENT REGISTRATION WAIVER: A generous donation by one of our participants will allow the first 5 graduate student researchers who submit a paper (that is accepted for presentation) to have their registration costs waived! The paper may be solo authored or co-authored, as long as a graduate student is the first author and will be presenting the paper at the conference.

Please share this announcement with other stress researchers and graduate students who may not be on our mailing list.

Send all papers/abstracts or requests for information to Catherine Moran at Catherine.Moran@unh.edu
